Annual Report 2018

Report of the Manager

Dear members

We are pleased to bring you the annual report for the Aon Master Trust (Scheme) for the year ended 31 March 2018.

Investment markets over the year

After a period of fairly steady growth in asset prices through most of 2017, volatility returned to capital markets in the first three months of 2018, leading to negative returns from share markets and only small positive returns from fixed interest investments. Fortunately, the strong returns which were achieved in the previous nine months meant that returns for the full year were reasonably robust. Growth-oriented funds outperformed the more conservative funds as growth assets (primarily shares and property) fared better than cash and fixed interest investments over the year, despite underperforming in the last quarter.

The volatility that investors experienced in the first quarter of 2018 was a useful reminder that asset prices do not go up in a straight line. In fact, the period of very low volatility in share markets that has been experienced over the last five years or so is very unusual. Perhaps we are just starting to see a move back towards a more normal level of volatility.

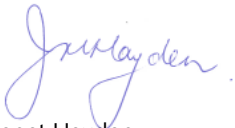

It is hard to pinpoint exactly why volatility has returned after such a long period of calm. The catalyst for the sell-off in share markets in early February 2018 was the announcement of a higher than anticipated level of wage inflation in the US. But the number itself was not significantly higher than expected – indeed with unemployment in the US running at a 17 year low, some evidence of wage inflation should not really have come as a surprise. So why the extreme reaction?

The recovery in share markets since the Global Financial Crisis of 2008/9 has come about as a result of slowly improving economic fundamentals and very accommodative monetary policy (i.e. very low interest rates accompanied by reserve banks aggressively buying fixed interest investments in order to keep yields low). This combination of policies has provided a tailwind that has allowed asset prices (in particular share prices) to outpace economic growth. Now that economic growth looks healthy enough to sustain some monetary tightening (rising interest rates and the end of bond buying by reserve banks), asset prices face a commensurate headwind. Any hint of higher than expected inflation makes investors nervous that the monetary tightening headwind will accelerate, even if the underlying economy remains healthy; and this is what we saw in February.

There are two other reasons for the increase in volatility – and these also originate in the US. Firstly the fiscal stimulus (tax cuts accompanied by additional borrowing and spending) that Donald Trump's presidency is implementing at this late stage in the economic cycle. This goes against traditional economic theory which would suggest fiscal tightening is more appropriate. And running alongside this is the prospect of a trade war between the US and China (and others), which is impacting heavily on share markets.

If we add into the mix political uncertainty in Europe, ongoing Brexit negotiations in the UK, a pick-up in economic growth and inflation in Japan and the oil price back above $70 per barrel and seemingly moving higher, it is likely that heightened volatility is here to stay. Ultimately, the outlook for the global economy is driving markets. In the short to medium term we are cautious about this. Inflation creeping up, rising interest rates in economies used to ultra-low rates and diminished liquidity as central banks tighten all point to the potential for asset prices to correct at some point. Trade and geopolitical stress add to the short term risks.

As we continually point out, your workplace savings scheme is a long term investment and investment managers need to be able to deliver in all economic conditions. They need to constantly balance risk and reward to ensure that members capture investment gains when things go well but are not overexposed when asset prices fall.

Investment returns

The performance of our underlying investment managers gets regularly reviewed by the Manager with the assistance of our investment consultant. Asset mixes for the Nikko, Milford and Russell funds are determined by the respective underlying investment managers, but are reviewed by the Manager to ensure they continue to be appropriate for the Scheme.

At Aon, the successful close of the divestiture of our HR outsourcing and global benefits administration business to Blackstone in early May 2017 has provided Aon with the opportunity to reshape the business. This has resulted in changes in the business both globally and at a Pacific level. As a result of these changes, at Aon New Zealand (the investment manager and administration manager of the Scheme):

- Janet Hayden's role as Head of Retirement and Financial Management was disestablished and Janet left Aon New Zealand in September 2017.
- Simon Ferry, Manager of Retirement & Financial Management, joined Aon New Zealand in May 2017.
